The ability to convert JPEG to RAW has long been promised and, in the case of this latest version, it's a reality. It's our first AI-powered conversion app and it looks beautiful. Before you download it, you need to know a few of its limits. It doesn't currently work well with photos taken with longer zoom lenses (or from a smartphone) or very wide-angle lenses (at least the Exmor versions) with Nikon's D4S (or later), D5 and D800. Likewise, it doesn't produce the same results when you zoom in and in low light, in high contrast scenes, if your subject is moving, or if you have a lens with vignetting. Indeed, this is a version of the app that's been polished heavily. It should work more like Photoshop's Camera Raw in this regard, because it's a machine learning-based app, and not exactly a perfect and consistent RAW conversion routine. You can download the app from the Mac App Store or the Google Play store for $9.99, which I think is fair. The app is designed for use on Apple systems, but will work just fine on the Pixel. For those of you who are curious about how the app works, here's a brief description: it uses machine learning to predict how a photo shot in a JPEG file is supposed to look in RAW, and then uses that knowledge to convert RAW to JPEG. The process is quite extensive -- it involves taking a picture, converting it to several different resolution levels, and then converting all of those images to RAW. Once it has them all in place, it converts them all to JPEG. What this does is produce high-quality RAW files, in the 100-200 megapixel range, from which you can continue the process and create (if you're so inclined) brand-new RAW images that are as good as if you had shot in RAW, but didn't save the space. The program is made for those of you who shoot JPEG images for day-to-day use, and it works quite well. It does have limitations, though, and it's easy to see why these limitations exist: it's a machine learning program, and can't be trained to recognize nuances in a JPEG file that can easily be missed by the program. Here are some of the limitations the developers have said they're aware of, but are addressing with fixes in their next release. Out-of-focus photos are very difficult

Published May 14thÂ .Former world champion WBC world heavyweight champion Tyson Fury has been convicted of hitting his ex-girlfriend on the head, leaving her with brain damage, at their York flat. Fury, 27, was cleared of a charge that he racially abused Miss Eto'o when he referred to her as "monkey" in a conversation with a wrestling friend while he was still dating the pair. He is instead guilty of two offences - one of assault occasioning actual bodily harm (ABH) and another of assault by beating. The guilty verdict ends a long-running dispute between Fury and Miss Eto'o, who was then known as Tammy Hairston and with whom he was living at their flat in York in January 2015. Fury has not yet responded to the ruling but in a statement following the verdict said: "I will never let my name be tarnished by this court. "Like the rest of the world, I am very disappointed by this court's decision today. "I will vigorously appeal this conviction, but for now I would like to focus on the rehabilitation of myself and my family." Fury said he was "extremely disappointed" at the ruling, adding: "I'm taking my case to appeal as I have done in the past and I will do everything I can to clear my name." The world heavyweight champion was cleared of racially abusing Miss Eto'o at their flat in January 2015, during a row over his mistress Deborah Drinan. A jury at Manchester Crown Court cleared him of the charge but convicted him of an ABH offence and a second of assault occasioning actual bodily harm. He was also convicted of one count of encouraging a person to commit a racially aggravated public order offence. The boxer was cleared of a second count of encouraging a person to commit a racially aggravated public order offence, but
